Ian Eisenberg, being duly sworn, hereby states.

1 I am a defendant in the above-captioned case. I also am the sole owner of defendant Olympic Telecommunications, Inc ("Olympic"), and of defendant French Dreams. I am over eighteen years of age, competent to testify to the matters stated in this affidavit and make this affidavit from personal knowledge of those matters.

2 In addition to Olympic and French Dreams, I own a number of other companies. Until the Cyberspace venture at issue in this litigation, the companies I owned primarily provided or supported audiotext services, i e, enhanced telephone services often accessed through 900 numbers.

3 Both prior to and during the time of the Cyberspace venture, Olympic was a billing aggregator. A billing aggregator is an intermediary between a company offering a service and the local telephone company. Olympic, like all billing aggregators, has billing and collections agreements with most of the telephone companies, and all the major local exchange carriers ("LEC's", which also are referred to as local telephone companies) Olympic formats the computerized records of the company offering the service, prepares them for billing and sends them to the numerous telephone companies that actually send out the bill pages. The telephone companies remit all sums collected to Olympic, which in turn distributes the proceeds (less its fee and other sums) to the company offering the services. Olympic also instructs the telephone companies to issue credits to end users to satisfy complaints.

4 In 1998 Olympic was providing this service for a company called yp net. Yp net enrolled consumers in an on-line version of the yellow pages. Businesses subscribed by cashing a check.

5 Also in 1998, Don Reese, who at the time was Olympic's billing manager and later its Secretary and Chief Operating Officer, showed me the yp net promotion and urged me to create a similar promotion. Having no direct marketing experience, I was reluctant to do so. For a number of months thereafter, Mr. Reese continued to urge me to engage in a similar marketing promotion.

6 In mid-1998, Mr. Reese arranged for me to meet defendant Heberd. Defendant Heberd had decades of experience in direct mail marketing. Mr. Reese and I showed Mr. Heberd yp net's mail promotion, and the two companies agreed to explore a joint venture for a similar promotion.

7 Defendant French Dreams, my company, and defendant Coto, Mr. Heberd's company, formed defendant Electronic Publishing Ventures ("EPV"). French Dreams and Coto each owned fifty percent of EPV. EPV in turn owned defendant Cyberspace.

8 Cyberspace's first marketing venture was an electronic yellow pages promotion similar to that of yp net.

9 In 1998, Cyberspace began making arrangements to offer internet service to which businesses and consumers would subscribe by cashing a promotional check.

10 My companies and Mr. Heberd's companies generally were responsible for a different portion of the operation. Defendant Heberd or his employees obtained mailing lists, created the promotions, had attorneys specializing in direct marketing review the materials, and arranged for mailing Defendant Heberd's employees also handled the day to day bookkeeping and accounting for Cyberspace Olympic was to provide most customer service and would be the billing aggregator for Cyberspace

11 Cyberspace entered into a contract with Starnet Services, L L C., an internet service provider, through whom Cyberspace customers would access the internet At the time, Starnet, a recognized company in the industry, provided service through local telephone numbers in most but not all of the United States In order to provide toll free internet access throughout the United States, Cyberspace also entered into an agreement with GTE, which had local access numbers for areas not covered by Starnet

12 Subscribers to Cyberspace's services received unlimited internet access usually billed at $19.95 per month for consumers and $29.95 per month for small businesses. This service included e-mail service with an "@cyberspace.com" address and a personal web page

13 E-mail services were accessed on line, in the same way that a Hotmail user accesses e-mail on line Some consumers and businesses wanted a cyberspace.com address because of the name Such subscribers did not have to use the Cyberspace internet service to retrieve their e-mail For example, someone with high speed internet access who was willing to pay $19.95 or $29.95 per month for a cyberspace.com e-mail address likely would never use Cyberspace's internet access Such consumers often signed up by contacting us directly, rather than by cashing a promotional check

14 Cyberspace sent a number of different promotions to businesses and consumers Although I did not see many of the promotions before they were mailed, I understand that on January 28, 2002, Mr Heberd filed a response to Plaintiff's Third Request for Admissions from Defendant Chris Heberd in which he admitted that all of the promotions attached hereto as Exhibit A are examples of marketing materials sent to consumers with a solicitation check Many of these promotions are familiar to me All of them were created by defendant Heberd or his employees. Most of the direct mail pieces appear to be similar Virtually all included a check in the amount of $3.50 I believe that a small number of test mailings contained checks in different amounts. The direct mail pieces had several disclosures. The first was in an insert in the envelope. The promotions also had a check and a check stub. There were disclosures on the back of the check and on the back of the check stub.

15 On behalf of Cyberspace, Mr. Heberd retained Lewis Rose, Esq., at the time a partner in Arent Fox and a noted authority in the field of direct marketing laws and regulations, to review all promotions that were mailed. I did not see many of the promotions before they were mailed, but I repeatedly was assured by Mr. Heberd that all were approved by counsel.

16 The promotions underwent further review by the LEC's. Under the terms of Olympic's billing and collections agreements with the LEC's, all promotions had to be submitted to the LEC's for approval prior to billing.

17 Once a solicitation check was deposited, Cyberspace mailed a CD-ROM to the subscriber. Most computers come with browsers already loaded. A subscriber could have entered a Cyberspace local access number into the browser already loaded onto the computer, however, the CD-ROM also gave consumers an e-mail program and dozens of utility programs.

18 When a subscriber negotiated a check, Cyberspace would activate service, that is, it would permit access by a consumer. Cyberspace paid a fee to Starnet for each subscriber even if the subscriber never logged on.

19 Olympic's responsibilities included customer service. At various times, other entities also provided customer service for the Cyberspace ventures. The LEC's provided customer service when a subscriber called with a question about the charge on the subscriber's telephone bill. Capital Gains, a company owned by defendant Hebert, and two other companies, Pinnacle and Integretel, also provided customer service to insure that subscribers would have faster access to customer service representatives. Finally, written complaints from regulators were handled by the Heberd organization or by Lewis Rose, Esq.

20 Prior to June, 1999, Mr. Reese was the billing manager for Olympic and other companies owned by me. He also was the vice president of one of those companies,

Common Concerns In June, 1999, Mr Reese became the Secretary and Chief Operating Officer of Olympic and various other companies owned by me

21 I attended much of Mr. Reese's deposition and heard him deny that he ever was an officer of any of my companies that he was Vice President of Common Concerns This is incorrect Attached as Exhibit B is a corporate resolution signed by me naming him secretary of Olympic in June, 1999 While three years later I do not specifically recall this document, I have taken this from the regularly kept books and records of Olympic

22 Mr Reese also was the Secretary of another company owned by me, U S Networks Attached as Exhibit C is the corporate resolution naming Mr Reese secretary of U S. Networks Minutes of a subsequent meeting of the U S Networks Board of Directors were signed by Mr Reese as Secretary of that company and are attached as Exhibit D I also have found numerous pieces of correspondence in my office addressed to Mr. Reese as Secretary of these companies

23 During the FTC's investigation of Cyberspace in the fall of 2000, Lewis Rose, Esq , who represented Cyberspace, prepared various documents to submit to the FTC As I understand it, Jeff Fritz and Wayne Chia, who were employees of the Heberd defendants, compiled various information from the Heberd defendants' databases, including the dates that various pieces were mailed, total number of pieces mailed, and the response rates by small businesses and consumers

24 I saw draft of Mr Rose's letter to the FTC detailing this information Although I have no way in which to verify this information independently, I have no reason to believe it is not correct

25 It also is my understanding that the Heberd defendants are making a motion for summary judgment that will include an affidavit from Mr Heberd providing and verifying this information

CYBERSPACE INTERNET SERVICES

As an Internet provider, we want to give all our customers the best Internet service to keep them at the top of the business world. This alone makes Cyberspace a real bargain for Internet service. However, our valued customers receive other benefits as well, including 56K connection for very fast dial-up access to the Internet, "user friendly" Internet installation software on a CD-ROM, a free Web browser, local dial-up numbers in most major cities, an e-mail address, and 4MB of web space. We provide all this for the low, low price of only $29.95 per month, which, when the enclosed check is endorsed and cashed or deposited, will be billed conveniently to the customer's local phone bill. (The enclosed check is real cash it with our best wishes!) Consequently, the enclosed check is our way of introducing individuals to this Internet service and initiating a subscription as easily and conveniently as possible. With this many benefits, Cyberspace customers can begin taking full advantage of conducting business on the Internet, that vast, new...and growing...market of individuals ready to buy products and services on-line. Smart business people know that no market should ever be ignored, and the Internet certainly cannot be ignored for too long. A Cyberspace Internet account can be a real "shot in the arm" for any business needing sales enhancement.

Once you've established an Internet presence with Cyberspace, you are encouraged to consider further enhancements. This will maximize your investment and insure that your advertising message is presented as professionally and persuasively as possible.

It's important to remember that building a homepage is not an end in itself. It's a means to an end. The end is to create a place where customers can find the information they need, and where they can interact with the company.
